Job description

SENIOR URBAN RESEARCHER/ (PROJECTS LEADER)

Date
Jan-2019

Salary guide:
£33,500 - £37,500 per annum, dependent on experience
(plus company benefits structure)

We are looking for an experienced urban researcher with knowledge of the London regeneration landscape to join our growing team in our London office. We are seeking a new team member at a senior level capable of working alongside the practice partners and senior management team. The ideal candidate will have experience in undertaking quantitative and qualitative research through analytical and engaged processes. The role includes contributing fieldwork and desk-based data auditing to a number of research commissions spanning spaces of culture, industry and employment. Ideally you will have worked within a similar role within a place-making, architecture or academic organisation in the past. The ideal candidate will be responsible for managing a small project team delivering urban research.

Experience

Candidates applying should:

- have a Masters-level qualification in urban studies or similar related subject
- have UK-based experience of urban research commissions, ideally for public sector clients
- have experience of leading a team of assistants, overseeing project resourcing levels and time management
- have the ability to lead on project development
- be familiar with London's regeneration context and best practice
- be seeking opportunity for career progression within the office from this level to a role pursuing, securing and shaping the outputs of the practice
- demonstrate a powerful public conscience in pursuing project goals and practice aims
